Houghton Highlanders know that being on an athletic team is more than an end in itself. It is a deliberate way of making oneself available to others—and to God Himself—for His sanctifying, redemptive, and joy-filled purposes in the world.

—SHIRLEY A. MULLEN
A WORD FROM THE PRESIDENT

Athletic rivalry — first intramural and later intercollegiate — has been a valued aspect of community life for both men and women at Houghton since early in the 20th century. The various sports guaranteed year-round leisure time activities for both participants and spectators. Over the years, athletics has increasingly been recognized as an integral part of the Houghton educational experience. What better way to learn self-discipline, the capacity for deferred gratification, the life lessons of losing and winning, the importance of teamwork and collaboration, and the rewards of submitting one’s own effort to a goal larger than oneself?

Athletics at Houghton has also become an intentional avenue for ministry and service both locally and globally. Whether through teaching fifth-grade Sunday School at the Houghton Wesleyan Church, hosting Saturday morning soccer for area school children, or traveling to play basketball or soccer in the Czech Republic, in Africa, or in Latin America, Houghton Highlanders know that being on an athletic team is more than an end in itself. It is a deliberate way of making oneself available to others — and to God Himself — for His sanctifying, redemptive, and joy-filled purposes in the world.

Houghton’s move to the Empire 8 Athletic Conference of the NCAA Division III represents a new stage of intentionality in linking athletics to Houghton’s larger vision of academic excellence and commitment to be visible to those students who are looking for the high-quality and integrated Christian educational experience that Houghton offers.

The $12 million gift from Terry and Kim (Kerr ’91) Pegula toward a new athletic complex will provide expanded facilities for Houghton’s teams and facilitate greater opportunities for service to the larger community.

In this issue of Houghton magazine, we invite you to read about how athletics has contributed to the Houghton mission over the decades and to anticipate with us the continued impact of athletics at Houghton in the years to come.

The Houghton College Athletics Department is anticipating its most significant transition since the college’s adoption of intercollegiate athletics in 1967. Starting with the fall 2012 semester, the college will begin participating in the Empire 8 Conference of the NCAA Division III, ending 44 years of membership in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

TIMELINE: TRANSITION TO NCAA

- SPRING 2011: accepted into Empire 8 conference
- SUMMER 2011: accepted as exploratory member of NCAA Division III
- SPRING 2012: baseball and softball reinstated
- SUMMER 2012: application for provisional membership in NCAA Division III, a four-year institution-wide process

Jeff Babbitt ’96
Skip Lord ’80, executive director of athletics, contends, “The success of this current transition will impact Houghton students, faculty, staff and community members for years to come.”

Just a decade ago, Houghton’s position in the NAIA was firmly established. In 2001, Houghton joined the American Mideast Conference, one of the largest, and arguably strongest, NAIA conferences, boasting more than 21 institutions. In recent years, the AMC Conference has declined in membership and in June 2012 it officially dissolved.

The status of the AMC led the college to consider a range of options, including joining an NAIA conference outside of its geographic area, becoming an independent NAIA school, or switching athletic affiliations to the NCAA Division II or Division III. After a period of study with input provided from across campus, the decision was made to apply for membership in NCAA Division III.

“Division III is committed to the concept of the student-athlete, developing whole persons and fostering a program where athletics is integrated into the entire educational experience,” states Lord, affirming the new direction for the athletics program.

The decision to pursue Division III membership hinged upon finding a conference affiliation that would be a good match for Houghton. The Empire 8 Conference, comprised of small- to mid-sized academically rigorous private institutions, proved the ideal choice. Seven of the eight Empire 8 members reside in New York State, including Alfred, Elmira, Ithaca, Nazareth, Hartwick, Utica and St. John Fisher. This presents a welcome change, since past conference affiliations contained schools outside of Houghton’s geographic region, resulting in long road trips to opponents throughout Pennsylvania and Ohio.

To strengthen its application for Division III, Houghton made the strategic decision to add eight sports teams over the course of three years, bringing the total number of sports to 18. (The average Division III school fields 17 teams.) Baseball and softball were added in the spring of 2012; men’s and women’s lacrosse and golf will begin competing in 2012-13; men’s and women’s tennis will kick off in 2013-14. The goal, in addition to drawing students to the college who may not otherwise consider attending, is to offer more students the opportunity to participate in athletics, a key component of the Division III philosophy.

The benefits of the ongoing transitions are many and extend beyond the realm of athletics. Having a conference home in the middle of the college’s primary geographic region will provide enhanced visibility in local media and with prospective students and parents. New sports facilities (See athletic facilities article for further details.) have potential to attract thousands of individuals to campus for high school and college sporting events as well as non-athletic events, expanding the college’s outreach to local communities. Less travel time to away contests will be a win for students and faculty alike, and increased student participation will offer more students the opportunity to benefit from the transformative experience of college athletics.

Coaches, players and fans of Highlander athletics are adapting to new recruiting rules, gearing up for new conference opponents, cheering on new sports teams and anticipating new athletic facilities. The landscape of Houghton athletics is indeed changing. Throughout this transitional time, the vision for Houghton athletics remains steadfast: “The development of scholar-servants to enter the world to transform it for the sake of the Kingdom.” That’s a mission worth preserving.

100+ years of athletic facilities at Houghton

Marshall Green
Henry Clark Bedford, a Houghton Seminary teacher, proposed the need for a college gymnasium at an alumni meeting during the 1912 Commencement. According to Bedford, “I made a talk emphasizing the need of a gymnasium. My speech struck fire, and someone moved that we start taking subscriptions right then.” One thousand dollars was immediately pledged, and two years later ground was broken for Houghton’s first gymnasium, Bedford Gym, on May 8, 1914, near the site of the current Reinhold Campus Center.

Bedford Gym took 3½ years to complete, was constructed with 92,000 recycled bricks from the old seminary building, cost slightly over $10,000 to build and was constructed by faculty, staff and students after classes and on weekends. The building served not only as a gymnasium, but also as classroom space for the music and science departments. In 1923 a hardwood floor was installed and in 1926 an indoor swimming pool, infamously nicknamed “the Bathtub,” was added.

In 1952, the growing need for a new athletic facility came to the forefront but was delayed by more pressing construction. Twenty-four years later, after multiple design drafts and budget adjustments, construction of a new physical education center was finally approved. On September 8, 1978, ground was broken on the $2.6 million physical education center, and two years later, on October 11, 1980, the facility was dedicated. The physical education center was later named in honor of longtime Houghton employees, Kenneth and Doris (Garrett ’71) Nielsen. Bedford Gym was originally designed to accommodate a maximum population of 400 students; the Nielsen Center was designed to handle the current population of 1,200 students and boasted three regulation basketball courts, suspended perimeter track, auxiliary and gymnastics gym, competition-sized pool, four racquetball courts, an exercise physiology laboratory, locker rooms, class and seminar rooms, a trainer’s room, storage areas and faculty offices. Over the following decades, multiple renovations and upgrades occurred, including the construction of a large indoor rock-climbing gym, construction of a 2,200 square-foot fitness center and an 800 square-foot weight room with state-of-the-art equipment.

Houghton’s outdoor athletic facilities received a boost in 1998 with $1.3 million in improvements. Burke Field was constructed to serve as the main playing field for Houghton soccer and included a 1,300-seat grandstand with lights. The field was named in honor of former men’s soccer coach and athletic director Doug Burke and his wife, Esther. Additional upgrades included a field hockey field, tennis courts and an eight-lane all-weather track.

In November 2011, a vision for the next development in Houghton’s athletic facilities was cast, made possible by a $12 million donation by Houghton alumna Kim (Kerr ’91) Pegula and her husband, Terry Pegula. The new facilities will be located on the west side of Route 19 adjacent to the current outdoor athletic complex. Recently approved designs include a field house and stadiums for baseball and softball. The field house has three main priorities: an indoor track and field facility capable of hosting significant indoor meets; a competition-quality tennis facility; and space for athletic teams to train and practice during the winter months. The outdoor fields will allow the college to host baseball, softball, soccer, lacrosse and field hockey games and practices.

The initial $12M gift will be used for the development and construction of the athletics fields, including state-of-the-art turf for the current Burke Field. Dedication of the baseball and softball stadiums is slated for March of 2013. The Pegula gift also serves as the lead gift in the development and construction of the project capstone, a field house.

According to H. Skip Lord ’80, executive director of athletics, “The $12 million gift by the Pegulas presents a great opportunity for others to be part of the shared vision of Houghton College athletics.” That shared vision began with Henry Clark Bedford’s impassioned speech in 1912, the first step in a century-long development of athletic facilities at Houghton. Beginning with a $10,000 three-story gymnasium in 1913 to a multi-million dollar athletic complex, the college continues to benefit from the generosity of individuals throughout its history – those with the imagination to envision even greater opportunities for Houghton to expand its influence and achieve its mission.

alumni athletes share their transformative experiences in Houghton athletics.
At Houghton, athletics contributes to the life of the college and the development of students, uniquely fostering the college’s mission. Alumni athletes who currently serve on Houghton’s faculty and staff carry a distinct perspective concerning the role of athletics, both as it supports mission and impacts lives. We invite you to listen in as these individuals share their perceptions and reflections on the transformative nature of athletics.

What was the athletic climate like at Houghton when you were a student?

JLR: Virtually everyone participated either in intramurals or in Purple-Gold competition. The level of enthusiasm was quite high for the P-G competition since all students knew each other. The atmosphere was particularly electric at Purple-Gold basketball games because the gym was so small and always packed.

CF: Athletics was accepted well, and we took a lot of pride in our team g.p.a. (which was highest in field hockey several years running).

EK: Soccer ruled at Houghton. The men’s soccer team was very successful during my era.

Describe the athletic facilities available during your student years.

CF: The athletic facilities were AWFUL. Bedford Gymnasium: need I say more? The pool in the basement was so small it was nicknamed “Stroke-stroke-turn.”

JLR: The gym was very small and had a circular “track” above where spectators stood and which intruded over the court at both ends. You couldn’t take a three-point shot from the outside corner without risking having the ball hit the track above your head. The quarter-mile outdoor track was a cinder track with about four lanes, quite adequate for those days, occasionally with pools of water in low spots.

What role did athletics play in your overall Houghton experience?

CF: Athletics was central to my experience at Houghton – I would not have come to Houghton without field hockey – that would have been a deal breaker. I don’t remember our win-loss records much; I remember learning to play for the joy of serving Christ and praying for our opponents to see Christ in our lives as we played.

Combining athletic participation with a normal academic load helped me develop self-discipline and good time management skills.

How did your athletic involvement at Houghton influence the person you are today?

CF: Athletics taught me that winning isn’t everything and that a loss can teach you much more about life and character than a win can. It taught me a lot about balance, about how great it can feel to inhabit a fit body, and about the value of team and collaboration. It gave me another avenue to serve God – and to complete the notion of loving God with all my heart, soul, body, and mind.

DE: While I graduated only a year ago, I hope to bring the leadership, work ethic, and discipline that Houghton athletics refined to my relationships and medical career in years to come.

EK: Athletics has allowed me to make strong, long-lasting friendships. Playing sports breaks down barriers and relieves the awkwardness of some social relationships. Inevitably there and praying for our opponents to see Christ in our lives as we played. It was life-changing to think of athletic competition in these ways.

DS: Because of athletics I learned to be more disciplined. Every fall during the soccer season, I always had higher grades than I did the following spring while not in season. Looking back I was more fit, I wasn’t taking naps or wasting time and I was forced to be disciplined to get my work done.

DE: I remember running a particularly difficult track workout, in late spring one afternoon with Assistant Coach Mary (Gibson ‘06) Dougherty. I was running 800-meter repeats, which I confess was not my favorite workout, as a mid-distance runner. I ran a majority of the repeats alone that day, but it was the last 200 meters of my last repeat, the bitter end of the workout, that I remember most. Mary must have seen that my tank of energy was just about on empty, and I was struggling when she joined me, running stride for stride beside me. I could hardly manage my own breath, but she step by step pushed me through the finish line. Her encouragement was not just a physical presence, but the words she spoke. While I was nearing the end, she repeated the line “The joy of the Lord is your strength.” I might have remembered that tough workout, but the fellowship she brought me that day made it unforgettable. It is a small picture of what we all do on a daily basis — coming alongside one another to encourage and challenge each other to greater love of Christ in our every act.

EK: Athletics for me was HUGE. As a biology major, I had a lot of long and difficult classes and labs. After four hours in the lab, going to practice was like going on a picnic. It was therapy and sort of set my brain free for two hours every day. Playing a sport also immediately surrounded me with a close circle of friends, many of whom were very different from those I hung around within the science building.

JLR: Athletic participation at Houghton was of significant importance to me, not only as a bonding experience with fellow students — team sports do that — but also as a character-building experience. Combining athletic participation with a normal academic load helped me develop self-discipline and good time management skills. It also contributed to a healthy self-evaluation, appreciating areas of strength, as well as causing appropriate humility.
are collisions, inadvertent elbows and a host of other mishaps that often end in laughter and hilarity.

JLR: Probably the greatest impact that athletics (whether at Houghton or before) has had on my life is to develop a determination not to quit even in the face of difficulty or adversity. Track, and even more cross-country (my high school specialty), also taught me the art of pacing myself through the multitudinous requirements of daily life. These sports taught me to “read” my body, to know its limitations and work within those so as to avoid mental and physical injury.

NC: As part of a team there are so many things you can learn about life: choosing to act unselfishly for the betterment of a group, reacting positively when you win and when you lose.

Experiences like this in athletics prepare us to respond to adversity and tough situations all throughout our lives.

How does athletics foster the Houghton mission?

DS: The “lead and labor” part of our mission statement is so crucial and is serviced by sport involvement. Athletic participation cultivates leadership qualities, develops students into good followers for the sake of the team and pushes them beyond their imagined limits.

DE: Student-athletes learn much more than a specific sport’s skills at Houghton. Houghton athletic teams carry the name of Houghton across the country on a weekly basis. They have the opportunity to shine the love of Christ and the joy of His good gifts to those they play with, against and in front of. The commitment our athletic teams have to service projects and missions trips reflects not only on the individual students or athletic department, but on the college as a whole.

CF: Athletics fosters our mission by giving us another avenue into a prominent aspect of our culture — it keeps committed and thinking Christians in the dialogue.

JLR: One of Houghton’s primary missions is to develop a servant mindset taken from Scriptures, which teach that not only do we need to care for ourselves, but we must also care for others. Athletics is an excellent means to accomplish this because it provides the opportunity to better know oneself at a deeper level. But at the same time, athletics enhances one’s ability to work with others, to develop a teamwork ethic, to value others, and even to prefer others’ needs over one’s own by developing a sense of interdependence, helping us take our eyes off ourselves — very much along the lines of what Christ wants His church to be!
SPREADING THE GOSPEL THROUGH SPORT

Growing up in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania, Judy Fox ’89 attended a high school that did not offer competitive volleyball. She was recruited to Houghton for basketball and walked onto the college volleyball team by a narrow cut. Four years later, she was named an All-American.

“God clearly had a plan,” Fox remarked. Her improbable All-American award allowed her to take a short-term mission trip to Mexico, where God planted in her a dream and desire to start her own sports ministry. Although the seed was sown, it would be years before she would fully realize the extent of her calling.

Following her graduation at Houghton, Fox coached volleyball in various collegiate levels from the NAIA to the NCAA Division I, including the Big West Conference, home to three of the nation’s perennial top 10 teams. After a successful collegiate coaching career, Fox took on the head volleyball coaching position at a Christian high school in Dallas, Tex. Over a five-year
Houghton is a breeding ground for amazing friendships. I sincerely believe that the finest product of the rural community is that the relationships born in Houghton genuinely do last forever.

Among the most powerful influences in Fox’s time as a student-athlete were relationships with teammates and the lifelong friendships that were built. “Houghton is a breeding ground for amazing friendships. I sincerely believe that the finest product of the rural community is that the relationships born in Houghton genuinely do last forever.”

At Houghton, Fox was able to confirm that sport is her vehicle to share the Gospel message of Jesus Christ. She saw this modeled most tangibly while assistant coaching both volleyball and basketball alongside Coach Skip Lord.

“We are proud to call Judy one of our own,” shared Lord, executive director of athletics. “She is an amazing person who has built an outstanding organization that is using sport to further the cause of the Gospel around the world. At Houghton Judy was a very gifted two-sport athlete in volleyball and basketball who, even then, was committed to using her athletic ability to share Christ with others. She is, without doubt, one of the most effective sports ministers I know.”
Houghton College recently bade adieu to three long-serving professors: Jake Jacobson, professor of mathematics, Ben King, professor of voice, and Carl Schultz, professor of Old Testament. Together, these men represent 116 years of service to Houghton, and their legacies are large indeed.

JAKE JACOBSON
When alumni talk about Jake Jacobson, they speak of his intelligence and humility, his gentle and quiet manner, and his deep love for mathematics, his students, and the Lord. Jake (who insisted that everyone call him Jake) was a “one-of-a-kind professor” who wore flannel shirts and jeans, was an avid football and basketball player, and faithfully rode his bicycle all over campus.

Jake was fantastic at helping students connect with math. Meagan (McNeely ’10) Starr writes, “The best part about Jake’s class was the way he taught it. We could tell he was brilliant, but he never made us feel stupid when we didn’t understand. He was always willing to sit down after class and go over things. And he knew how to take the most complicated concepts and bring them down to an easy-to-follow level. I hated math at the start of the class, but Jake made me love it and enjoy it.”

Jake amassed 46 years of teaching math at Houghton, but teaching was never just about the numbers. He genuinely loved building relationships with his students, and many attest to Jake’s incredible influence in their lives. “He taught me to value academic excellence but also to seek balance and godliness in all of my life,” writes Sharon (Meiners ’98) Wolcott. “He instilled confidence in me,” says Jonathan Sastic ’75. “I don’t know where I would be without Jake,” declares Adam Sullivan ’03.

Alumni speak of how Jake’s patience and kindness made a difference on the Houghton campus. Judy Gale ’87 writes, “When I think of Jake, ‘brother in Christ’ and ‘servant-leader’ immediately come to mind. His presence on campus helped set a spiritual climate that aided in the growth and cultivation of my faith.”

Rhonda (Slate ’94) Walsh recollects, “Most people will remember Jake as standing in front of a huge calculus class, coming up with difficult problems with a wave of his hand, and saying, ‘I’m sure the answer isn’t real obvious to you.’ But Jake cared about his students and his assistants. Brilliance with love — that’s Jake.”

BEN KING
Some alumni fondly remember Ben King singing “If I were a rich man” as Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof. Others remember the sound of his booming voice and laugh, or the day he showed up to class in slippers, or the music listening sessions where he treated students to “ear candy.” For all who entered the Greatbatch School of Music, King was a walking encyclopedia of musical knowledge and an enthusiastic musician, educator, administrator, and friend.

King combined high energy with a calm presence and unwavering trust in God. He might have flailed his arms around if he got particularly excited about what a person was singing, but his students also knew they could tell him anything in the world, and he would listen with compassion and wisdom.

Classes and lessons with King were never dull. To reinforce concepts in vocal pedagogy, he would have students lie on the floor to practice breathing or get them to make “unbelievable noises” and silly faces at themselves in the mirror. Starr says, “Dr. King knew how to get the most out of his students, and he was willing to look absolutely ridiculous if it would help us remember what he was teaching. He taught me how to unpack ideas and use them.” Joanna Stolzenburg ’11 confesses, “I felt like I could sit in that class and listen and learn all day and I’d be happy. I took away so much from his classes that I use regularly, and I always remember where I learned it.”

King was also an invaluable resource outside of the classroom. Starr writes, “He was not only a great teacher, he was a great mentor, and he was always willing to listen if I needed to talk. I spent countless hours in his office trying to figure out my life and schedule over my four years of college, and he did so much to help and encourage me.” And Jeremy Wilton ’01 reflects, “I always knew that I could go to him with any issue or problem I had. His unique personality had a way of putting things in perspective for me, and I always felt like he was capable of bringing out the best in me.”

CARL SCHULTZ ’53

Carl Schultz loved teaching eight o’clock classes, and many Houghton alumni first encountered his dry wit, keen insights, and high standards in an early morning biblical literature class. Jonathon Jankovich ’92 remembers how Schultz “spoke often of putting the correct em-PHAS-is on every syl-LAB-le, all the while sipping coffee from a well-used styrofoam cup.” Houghton alumni describe Schultz as a man of “firm conviction” and “heated intensity,” who was unafraid of challenging assumptions and preconceived notions. “He loved to throw young minds for a loop,” explains Nick Furman ’05, who says, “I consider his audacity and voracious appetite for truth to be part of a major turning point in my own pursuit of God and all things academic… Through Dr. Schultz’s life and witness, I learned that the process of critical thinking often begins with a conscious departure from the thought patterns of the world and the blanket appraisals of the masses and a naked standing before God with the words, ‘Here I am, Lord. Teach me Your ways.’”

Schultz was a diligent, reverent, and passionate scholar of the Word of God. “He deepened my understanding of the biblical text,” writes Jankovich, “but he also instilled in me a love for those texts and a love of correctly interpreting and teaching them. I love God’s Word so much, and I deeply love the One who gave them, both of which I acquired in part from Carl Schultz.”

As a lifelong pastor (Schultz served as minister of two United Methodist churches while carrying a full-time teaching load), he was able to encourage others in their pastoral ministry and educational pursuits. Alumni were impressed not only by Schultz’s rigor but also by his grace. “He was focused on living a life that was pleasing to the Lord,” says Becky (Gardiner ’94) Todd, and Lenny Luchetti ’96 remembers how Schultz spoke with “tact and forthrightness, grace and truth.” Throughout his 43 years at Houghton, Schultz frequently lectured on the topic of vocation, and he understood the far-reaching implications of Colossians 3:23 (NRSV): “Whatever your task, put yourselves into it, as done for the Lord and not for your masters.”
Some might say that it was truly a perfect spring day, sunny, mid-70s with a delicate hint of a breeze. Four years of study (more for some, less for others) were coming to an end, and a new exciting and uncharted chapter in life was about to begin. On this day, May 12, 2012, the Houghton College class of 2012 celebrated Commencement surrounded by family, friends, faculty, staff, administrators and members of the 50-year class of 1962.

294 undergraduates and three master's degree students proudly walked across the stage of the John and Charles Wesley Chapel to receive their diplomas and join a group of more than 20,000 individuals around the world who call themselves Houghton alumni.

President Shirley Mullen ’76 addressed the graduating class and audience. “If you are here today, you are family, and this is a grand family celebration, when as parents, professors, grandparents, siblings, and friends, we gather to rejoice in the gifts that God has given to our graduates and more specifically today, in these graduates’ stewardship of those gifts.”

The Commencement Address was given by Dr. Richard Foster, renowned pastor, theologian and author. “So, what, after all, has this degree of sacred letters given you?” asked Dr. Foster of the graduating class. “I hope it has given you an insatiable hankering to know and to grow. I hope it has given you a brutal honesty about the world in which we live. I hope it has given you an ability to see new, creative possibilities for the future.”

The class of 2012 included students with deep alumni ties. Ben Clark is a fifth generation Houghton student whose great-great-grandparents, Sylvester and Elizabeth Rathbun Bedford, attended Houghton in the late 1880s. JohnMark Pocock had two great-grandparents attend Houghton prior to the school granting degrees and a great-great-great uncle, Melvin Warburton, who received the first seminary diploma in 1888. Luke Doty is the great-grandson of former Houghton College President Stephen Paine, 1936-1972.

The senior class gift was presented by Megan Toombs ’12. The gift is an adult-size swing set that stands just on the other side of the road that runs past the president’s office. “On behalf of the Houghton College community, I gratefully accept this gift,” said President Mullen. “I look forward to taking my first swing and plan to use it often whenever I need a brief respite from the president’s office to reflect on the latest presidential puzzle. And when I do, I will think gratefully of the Class of 2012.”

The 50-year class also participated in the weekend’s festivities. During Baccalaureate they officially presented a “Words of Wisdom” booklet to the current class and on Friday attended a special lunch, hosted by the President, which included leaders from both classes.

In closing the Commencement ceremony, President Mullen pronounced, “Today you have become graduates of Houghton College…you have been challenged to use your gifts. Tomorrow, find your challenge and the grace that God has prepared for you.”

blessing in tragedy

As the class of 2013 eagerly anticipates their senior year at Houghton and their turn to don cap and gown next year, one young woman will not be graduating alongside her classmates as planned.

May 2013 marks the intended graduation of Christine Besaw, who died four years ago from traumatic injuries sustained in a tragic car accident before she could attend her chosen college.

When Gary and Cindy Besaw of Rutland County, Vermont, first investigated Houghton College for their daughter, Chris was not enthusiastic at the idea. Then, during a campus visit in April of 2008, she met Susan (Gurney ’81) Martin, assistant professor for education, who recognized Chris’s lack of interest and encouraged the high school junior to go wherever God led, even if it wasn’t Houghton.

“I think Chris was kind of blown away by that attitude,” Gary recalls. That same day, Chris surprised her family by announcing she would be attending Houghton College and made the decision public by updating her Facebook profile to include a picture of herself wearing a Houghton College t-shirt.

Less than a month later, on May 18, 2008, the Besaw family suffered the loss of their daughter. The days that followed the accident were trying as they sought God’s plan amid their grief. “Make no mistake about it…there has been much pain and frustration,” said Gary in a book he would later write about Chris’s life. “However, one thing [was] clear to each of us: God works through pain, suffering, struggles, and joy to bring about the best for His bride.”

The Besaw family chose to host a celebration in honor of their daughter’s life. A few days prior to the celebration, the family received a standard admission mailing from Houghton College. Gary sent an email to all of the colleges Chris had considered, explaining the accident and requesting they be removed from mailing lists.

The family was surprised when they received a personal e-mail from Ryan Spear ’07, associate director of admission, extending his sympathies and assuring them their request would be honored. In addition, Ryan attached an e-mail Chris had sent to Professor Martin in her excitement about wanting to attend Houghton:

I just wanted to say thank you so much for meeting with me on Thursday. To be honest, I went to Houghton not really interested in the college, but after going there and meeting with you I absolutely love it. The education program at Houghton sounds wonderful and I would definitely be thrilled to be a part of it. I have a very difficult decision ahead of me but I know God will direct me. So thank you for taking time out of your day to meet with me. And maybe someday I will be able to call you professor. :)

A few days later, the Besaw family received a box of Chris’s favorite flowers, white day lilies, from the admission office at Houghton. “I think it was about that time that Cindy and I decided that we would certainly try to do something nice for Houghton one day,” remembers Gary, surprised at the thoughtful gift.
If my greatest hopes and dreams for my children are that they love the Lord, live for Christ and influence others for God, then did my hopes and dreams for Chris really come to an end?

“They truly demonstrated that they are a Christian college in more ways than we could have imagined.”

Over the next months, the Besaw family witnessed how Chris’s death was impacting their community as people came together to remember and reflect on Chris’s life and seek God as a result of her testimony. During this time of healing, Gary and Cindy made the decision to bless Houghton in memory of their daughter.

“What impressed me about Gary and Cindy was their seemingly immediate desire to bless others in the face of their tragedy,” remembers Ryan. “It is tempting to try to boil the events of Christine’s life and death down to a simple Sunday school lesson of ‘everything happens for a reason.’ I think it is closer to the truth to admit that things happen in life that don’t make sense – that are heartbreaking and soul-wrenching – but that, in spite of these experiences, God still works and speaks and seeks the good of His children.”

Working with staff from Houghton, Gary and Cindy set up the Christine Besaw Endowed Scholarship which would be awarded to a student planning on pursuing Chris’s intended major, English secondary education. This scholarship was originally meant for one student but was generously expanded to include up to four; providentially, this gift has helped one of Chris’s best friends to attend Houghton.

“I was reminded of something very important,” writes Gary in the last pages of Chris’s story. “If my greatest hopes and dreams for my children are that they love the Lord, live for Christ and influence others for God, then did my hopes and dreams for Chris really come to an end? Chris loved the Lord, she lived her life to the fullest…even today I hear accounts of someone who has had his or her life changed by interaction with Chris or by the events of May 18th.”

It’s been four years since Chris’s passing, and while she isn’t calling Susan Martin professor or excitedly planning her senior year alongside friends, Chris has left a mark upon Houghton College. While the junior class looks to the future, Chris’s story brings to light the precious gift of the present.

Gary Besaw’s book detailing Christine’s story, A Peanut Learns to Dance: How One Girl’s Tragedy Transformed the Christian Community, is slated to be published this fall.
