CONVERSATION

I was delighted to read the article about Harry Thomas, because I was a member of the Class of ’65 and remember very well Harry’s and Terry’s contributions to campus life.
- Judith Anderson ’65, Midlothian, Va.

First of all, the cover was very impressive. Second, I read it cover to cover the first day after I received it in the mail. All of the articles were fascinating, but I have to admit the first article really resonated with me, because my life seems so “ordinary,” especially when compared to the rest of the featured alumni. Those others were doing such energetic, outstanding things!
Third, I ALWAYS read the “Alumni News,” even though most of the notes seem to be from much later classes than mine.
- Sharon (Huff) Anderson ’64, Prescott, Ariz.

The magazine in this and recent issues has come across as more advancement-focused, appearing to try to justify Houghton, rather than to share more about what’s going on on campus. As an alumnus, I’m thoroughly sold on the value of a Houghton education and continue to be proud of my Highlander Heritage. I would love to see more alumni photos and news in coming issues.
- Jonathan Davidson ’05, Lafayette, Ind.

Excellent issue! Loved knowing that Pastor Harry Thomas and his wife are Houghton graduates. We have been going to the Creation Festival in Mt. Union, Pennsylvania, for years – and we now know that our son, Robert (class of 2013), and Pastor Harry have something in common! Houghton has some amazing alumni, and it is great to find out about the work that God is doing through those alumni (and current students).
- Susan Martin, Mt. Airy, Md.

Facebook comment in response to Brian Reitnour’s article, “Life’s Persistent Questions:” I changed my degree about three times and ended up with a master’s in my original area of interest. I was blessed at Houghton to have an education that equipped me in every area. Every professor invested in me, and I learned about subject areas through God’s lens. God uses whatever you study for His glory, so you can’t really go wrong.
- Susan (Ventresca ’00) Veenema, Newark, Del.

No matter how many times we have met spring, it is always new. Fresh green shoots still surprise us each April as if we had never seen them before. As Christians, we should be accustomed to this pattern of eternal newness coming from what is at the same time foundational and utterly reliable. Our God, who is from everlasting to everlasting, “the same yesterday, today, and forever” is also the grand innovator — creating “new hearts” (Ezekiel 36:26); issuing “new commandments” (John 13:34); revealing “new covenants” (I Corinthians 11:25); making us into “new creations” (II Corinthians 5:17); and promising ultimately a “new heaven and a new earth” (Revelation 21:1).

This God who is at work in all generations “making all things new” is our model at Houghton College. In our work as students, faculty and alumni, we seek to imitate our God — Father, Son, and Holy Spirit — in the eternal work of innovation and regeneration. Through studying the Scriptures, analyzing texts, producing or performing a work of art, exploring the natural world, we are about the task of creatively applying longstanding truths to new circumstances, prompting new answers through asking new questions, inviting deeper understanding through an artistic performance, and translating historic realities into new language to meet today’s challenges and opportunities.

In this issue, you will be inspired by the stories of Houghton faculty and alumni who are about the work of innovation in a wide range of disciplines and in many circumstances around the world. Some of the stories are dramatic. Some reflect the quiet and daily creativity that ought to characterize each of our lives.

May you be surprised by God’s ever-renewing work in your own life. May you be surprised by God’s ever-renewing work in your own life.

Grace and Peace to you.

Shirley A. Mullen, Class of 1976
President
Paul and Mildred (“Miggy”) Krentel ’42 met early in their Houghton careers. In 1940 Paul was sophomore class president and Miggy an incoming freshman. Both left Houghton soon after meeting – and without graduating – to embrace a shared dream of raising a large family. Young, dedicated, and energetic, Paul and Miggy Krentel could not know how their dreams of family and faith would falter in tragedy, change during unanticipated challenges, and eventually flourish through perseverance.

Miggy had given birth to five healthy children when she and Paul began envisioning their future as aging parents, encompassed by their thriving adult sons and daughters.

Then Martha, their fifth child, died.

The Krentels faltered. The unexpected death of their baby girl devastated the middle-aged couple and the rest of the children. After years of fulfilling youthful dreams conceived at Houghton, the trajectory of the Krentels’ life grew uncertain and somber.

But their uncertainties only began with Martha’s death. In 1963 a sixth child was born. It soon became evident that Melissa had Down’s Syndrome and would never be capable of living independently.

Paul and Miggy began searching for a home-like setting where Melissa could thrive, a place that would provide basic live-in care, comfort and happiness for those with special needs. Not satisfied with recommended institutional settings, the Krentels’ vision expanded to help not only their own daughter fulfill her potential, but others with developmental challenges as well. The Krentels wanted their daughter to have friends and to live somewhere that felt, looked, and smelled like home.
In 1966, after vigorous prayer and fundraising, the couple sold their home and purchased a 35-room mansion in Berwyn, Pennsylvania, assuming a $70,000 mortgage. This was the beginning of Melmark, an institution named for Melissa, Martha, and the Krentel family name; it was christened by Paul and Miggy as “the house that love built” and is called “the happiest place on earth” by the current president and CEO, Dr. Joanne Gillis-Donovan.

Over the next 24 years Melmark received monetary support from friends, families, and institutions throughout the country. Melmark’s population grew and the campus flourished into a bustling center of activity and encouragement for its residents. Paul abandoned a career in the private sector to oversee Melmark’s future early in its history, while Miggy and the older Krentel children – Dave, Bob, Steve, and Diane – worked together to craft an environment in which any family could house a loved one without worry or regret.

Miggy helped develop programs for Melmark’s special-needs population that taught marketable skills and crafts and that engaged residents in the arts. Melmark challenged residents to achieve higher levels of independence than ever expected. Originally, this meant swimming in Melmark’s pool, riding horses, and enjoying Melmark’s acres of land. Now, nearly forty years later, a resident’s day might include learning office and building skills, creating dried flower arrangements for future sale, working with textiles, playing sports, acting with the Melmark Players, performing in the Joybells hand-bell choir, or attending parties. An intimate ratio of trained rehabilitative staff to residents provides the level of attention and care necessary to maintain Melmark’s standards of excellence and personal attention.

Paul was a perfectionist, a sharp businessman, and a caring father. Miggy was as spunky as her nickname implies – she rarely took “no” for an answer and refused to be content with situations others may have found inevitable. Her discontent with a system of storing rather than empowering functionally disadvantaged youth and adults led her to revolutionize the systems and standards of care for those with Down’s Syndrome, autism, and other disabilities, casting a vision for their future that continues to broaden and succeed over the 20 years since her retirement in the 1990s.

Melissa remains at Melmark where Paul’s and Miggy’s dreams of care, love, cleanliness, and activity have expanded for the inclusion of youth and adults across the autism spectrum, in addition to those suffering brain damage, a wide range of mental disabilities, and genetic disorders.

Today Melmark is overseen by Dr. Joanne Gillis-Donovan who, since early 1996, has worked to expand Melmark’s programs. Melmark serves a highly diverse population, recently opened a campus called Melmark: New England, and has a population of 1,000 residents and nearly 1,000 employees. Melmark’s services strive to deepen, enrich, and solidify the Krentels’ values and vision with high-quality clinical programs full of dynamism and progressive science, warmth, respect, and attentive care.

Paul Krentel passed away in 1996, followed by his loving widow and co-founder, Miggy, seventeen years later in January, 2013. Paul and Miggy envisioned a community that could help individuals fulfill the potential the outside world never thought they possessed. With a stubborn faith and a love for God—and one another—the Krentel family created a new niche in the world where those thought of as disabled, incapable, burdensome, or unstable could gain greater independence and become capable, productive, and cheerful. Paul and Miggy saw a different world for the functionally disadvantaged and dedicated themselves to helping others see that world too.

THE KRENTEL FAMILY CREATED A NEW NICHE IN THE WORLD WHERE THOSE THOUGHT OF AS DISABLED, INCAPABLE, BURDENSOME, OR UNSTABLE COULD GAIN GREATER INDEPENDENCE AND BECOME CAPABLE, PRODUCTIVE, AND CHEERFUL.

At the beginning of my freshman year in 1989, many of my classmates were arriving on campus with typewriters — the more “cutting-edge” students using word processing machines. For those with neither, the opening of the computer lab was a great opportunity. Cell phones were not in use at this time; the more progressive students in what was then called East Hall (now Gillette Hall) paid for personal phone service in their rooms. The rest of us waited, sometimes in line, for the hall phone to be available. Mindful of expensive long-distance fees, students regularly timed their calls to home in the evenings or on weekends to save a few cents per minute. If you wanted to connect with friends to go to Big Al’s, you could try calling their hall phone and hope someone would answer, but you might be more likely to walk around campus to find the action.

Fast forward to April 2013. As an employee at Houghton, I walk through the Campus Center and see that almost every student is on a device of some kind: texting (as they walk), working on a laptop or checking Facebook on an iPad. When they want to get in touch with a friend, they text or call, expecting an immediate response. When they want to know what’s going on, they tap into social media.

Innovations in communication have advanced at warp speed in just a few decades, making the stuff of sci-fi movies reality. At the forefront of this communication explosion has been social media, allowing us to share our lives, as openly as we choose, with our family and friends across time zones and oceans. Social media has also moved us beyond simple communication into connectivity. While the Internet built the foundation of the web, social media has connected individuals and given them a voice and a platform from which to speak.

Noel Hahashy ’03 has embraced the inspirational potential of social media, in the true liberal arts tradition, weaving it into a self-challenge of life-long learning. “One day,” recalls Noel, “I was helping a friend clean his kitchen. He had made yogurt and I thought, ‘you know, it would be fun to try to make yogurt some time.’ That grew to, ‘you know, I’d like to try a bunch of new things.’ I had just turned 30 and thought this would be a great way to continue to challenge myself, learn, keep myself mentally and personally sharp.”

Noel started a blog, www.theadventurertoday.com, where he began to chronicle his journey; he also linked it to Facebook so friends could follow along.

“I’ve found myself energized to try things that I had never done before. I had more confidence to try new recipes, stretch myself physically, and go new places,” explains Noel. And in the process, he has inspired those within his social media network.

Social media has brought connectivity to the business world, as well. Shane Fraser ’11 helps small businesses maximize their social media impact and connect with their clientele. His company, Social Networking Assistance (www.snatoday.com), grew out of an internship experience as a student at Houghton College.

“My first professional social networking experience was an internship at a sports shop in Olean,” explains Shane. “Throughout the internship I was able to see social networking really impact this particular small business. Customers were interacting, business was speeding up, and the owners felt that they were able to communicate in real-time with all of their followers.”

After the internship concluded, Shane worked to deepen his understanding of how social media can impact businesses. Professor Ken Bates also helped Shane craft a business model that eventually birthed Social Networking Assistance.

“In the early stages of my business, I had the opportunity to work with a public school and help them reach more people within the community. When I joined the picture, they had no presence and by the end of my time helping them, they had quite a following.” Shane explains that helping the school connect to students and parents via social media tied the community together in a new way. “Not only were we able to make people aware of the school’s calendar events, but we were also able to post updates from sporting events, share news regarding cancellations/delays, and even help make community members and parents aware of a bomb threat! It was rewarding and intriguing to see the impact social media had on this small town,” says Shane.

Effective communication builds bridges that connect people with each other, with ideas and with a broader view of the world. While social media is a new, quicker way to connect, it’s the people and their ideas that make it exciting, useful and ever changing. What will the future of communication look like? Perhaps we should consult this summer’s blockbuster sci-fi films to find out.

Amy Tetta ’93 is the face behind social media at Houghton, working to connect the college to individuals through Facebook, Twitter and Pinterest.
Heeding God’s call to feed a multitude of people, a young disciple dared to plant a church from the ground up. Driven by a heart for broken people, Rosario Picardo ’03 maximized the resources God provided to launch Embrace Church, a bold, authentic community of faith.

True as the title of his new book, Embrace: The Church Plant that Broke all the Rules, Embrace Church has shattered every principle of proper church planting.

“Some would have called it a suicide mission,” states Rosario, a Houghton grad who majored in religion. Whereas a traditional church plant has funds and folks lined up before the church doors open, Embrace was equipped with pennies, a few able bodies and many scattered ideas. The church plant was both risky and innovative, necessitating a nontraditional approach.

“We hardly knew what we were doing,” Rosario admits. “God used that to do so much.”

Rosario heeded God’s call just as his own life was met with brokenness. Recently divorced and burned out by the “cookie-cutter Christian” imprint, he decided to make ministry his life. Broken and called to rebuild, the young graduate of Asbury Theological Seminary and newly appointed church planter set out to revitalize the Christian church community.

Rosario’s ministry began with a few disciples and a small donation from the United Methodist Church; together they formulated a carefully budgeted financial plan. As the gospel story goes, God allowed a small supply to surpass its measure.

Embrace Church opened its doors in downtown Lexington, Kentucky, just as a population decline plagued the area. Without a building, early gatherings were what Rosario calls “hanging out” in basements and public spaces. The church quickly grew to include house worship, community evangelism and outreach. Three challenging years later, Embrace Church has become a diverse and vibrant Christian faith community that reaches hundreds of people broken by poverty, burned out by religion and in need of healing grace.

Embrace has its home base at the Kentucky Theatre in downtown Lexington (Embrace Downtown), with two local campuses and three congregations. On Sunday mornings, dedicated volunteers set up Embrace Downtown from scratch, only to tear down a few hours later. Another congregation, simply called The Gathering, is a service that sounds just like its name: Christians enjoying fellowship and sharing life over a meal.

All of Embrace’s congregations follow an “ancient future” model, looking toward the future in terms of sustainability and relevance, while faithfully reverting to some of the oldest and greatest church traditions. Though the “typical” church service hardly exists, an Embrace service often features a benediction, the affirmation of creeds, responsive readings, testimonies and candlelight.

Embrace brings church to the people. Members regularly go out into the urban community to serve, interact, and get their hands dirty. Concerts and events are held in sports bars. According to Rosario, the church has found its niche in targeting twenty- and thirty-somethings, a generation they have found very concerned with living out their faith.

“We understand our calling to be primarily missional in nature,” he writes on the Embrace website. “Just as Christ left his place at the right hand of God to come to us, bringing the good news, offering himself up for us, so we wish to imitate Jesus by going out into the community in ways that allow us to serve different needs and different contexts. Our focus is much less on getting folks to come to us and much more on our going out to them.”

Rosario, who is now working on his Doctor of Ministry at United Theological Seminary, believes that his church-on-a-budget is a catalyst for innovation. American churchgoers are no longer a majority, according to a 2013 survey by Asbury Seminary, as about 17 percent of Americans attend church regularly and roughly 80 percent of American church givers are over 65 years of age. Embrace Church hopes to counteract the decline while being as self-sufficient as possible. “We are trying to get ahead of the curve by being a church that is low-maintenance, organized, structured and simple.”

Rosario’s approach is to rethink church, but not rethink the Gospel.

The church’s journey, from a basement gathering to a local park to the State Theater downtown, has not been easy. “I have had my car stolen and sold for twenty dollars, my tires slashed, my house vandalized and my life threatened for carrying out His call,” says an unapologetic Rosario. “God has called me to do this, and that is what keeps me going.”

Today, Embrace Church is a thriving spiritual community because of the prayer, presence, financial gifts and service of every willing member. Rosario can attest, however, that Embrace would not have survived without God’s unexplainable provisions, not unlike the gospel miracle of the feeding of the multitudes.

“We continue to make things work on five loaves and two fish.”

JUST AS CHRIST LEFT HIS PLACE AT THE RIGHT HAND OF GOD TO COME TO US, BRINGING THE GOOD NEWS, OFFERING HIMSELF UP FOR US, SO WE WISH TO IMITATE JESUS BY GOING OUT INTO THE COMMUNITY IN WAYS THAT ALLOW US TO SERVE DIFFERENT NEEDS AND DIFFERENT CONTEXTS. OUR FOCUS IS MUCH LESS ON GETTING FOLKS TO COME TO US AND MUCH MORE ON OUR GOING OUT TO THEM.

“I went to dental school thinking I was going to become an orthodontist,” reflects Jeff Prinsell '75. Now, Prinsell is a world-renowned innovator in sleep medicine surgery. His unmistakable passion seeps through in the work he does to help people suffering from Obstructive Sleep Apnea (OSA).

BEGINNINGS
After graduating from Houghton, Prinsell went to Tufts Dental School, followed by a dental residency where he discovered his passion—surgery. This led him to Vanderbilt for medical school, a general surgery internship, and an oral and maxillofacial surgery residency. His private practice (www.drprinsell.com) is in Atlanta.

Among a limited number of board-certified oral and maxillofacial surgeons licensed in both dentistry and medicine, Prinsell explains that the dual education and training gave him a more complete picture of OSA. “It really worked hand-in-hand, being able to converse with different medical specialties as well as the dental community, as both disciplines work with the airway,” said Prinsell.

WHAT IS OSA?
OSA is a medical disorder in which the upper airway obstructs during sleep, triggering pauses in breathing. The brain is oxygen deprived, resulting in daytime sleepiness, irritability, depression, short-term memory loss, reduced libido, and impaired concentration. Left untreated long-term, OSA can lead to high blood pressure, heart problems, stroke, and... death during sleep. Many industrial and motor vehicle accidents, which also place the public at risk, are caused by the daytime sleepiness from untreated OSA.

People suffering with OSA often live their daily lives as though in a fog, without realizing why. “It’s a severe medical problem, thought to be under–diagnosed,” said Prinsell. “There are thousands of people that do not know they have OSA and, therefore, are not being treated.”

DIAGNOSIS AND TREATMENT
Snoring, usually reported by a spouse, often drives the person to seek treatment. Treatments can include weight loss, dental appliances, and continuous positive airway pressure (CPAP). When these are intolerable or ineffective, surgery may be an option.

Maxillomandibular advancement (MMA) surgery advances the upper and lower jaws through controlled jawbone cuts to pull forward the soft palate and tongue base, which opens the entire upper airway. Once considered a last resort for severe cases of OSA, MMA surgery, through the work of Prinsell and others, has become a primary operation, even for mild cases of OSA.

MMA INNOVATIONS
Prinsell’s innovations include refinements in diagnostic and surgical techniques. Years ago, the main indication for MMA was a lower facial skeletal deformity, such as a retruded lower jaw. Both jaws were typically advanced the same amount, often resulting in an unaesthetic result. Prinsell showed that the primary anatomic criterion was hypopharyngeal airway (behind the tongue base) narrowing, rather than a skeletal deformity. His counterclockwise rotational advancement allows more lower jaw advancement that results in greater hypopharyngeal airway opening to enhance MMA effectiveness, and a more aesthetically pleasing facial appearance.

Prinsell also established goals and guidelines for OSA surgery. In earlier methodical protocols, MMA was typically performed only after stages of less effective and often painful dysfunctional surgery failed. Prinsell demonstrated what adjunctive procedures can be performed safely together with MMA in a “site–specific” approach — on the correctly identified anatomic sites of airway obstruction, which varies between different patients — as a comprehensive, definitive, single-staged operation.

Prinsell’s MMA innovations have produced extraordinary results. In a five-year clinical study of MMA surgery in 50 consecutive OSA patients, he reported a 100% success rate (Chest 116:1519–1529, 1999) – highest worldwide (Chapter 114 in textbook Current Therapy in Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery, Elsevier, 2011). He continues to publish and lecture, nationally and internationally (eg. World Congress on OSA in Rome, Italy, this past fall), on MMA for OSA.

The impact of Prinsell’s innovations expands beyond the surgical arena to his committed service in leadership positions (eg., founding president of the American Board of Dental Sleep Medicine, past president of the American Academy of Dental Sleep Medicine, and president–elect of the Georgia Society of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeons), which helps increase awareness of OSA to healthcare providers and the public through education, establishing standards of practice, and influencing legislation, such as regulation of drowsy driving to reduce motor vehicle accidents.

INFLUENCES
“I learned the importance of a loving, Christian family at an early age while living in Sierra Leone, West Africa, where my parents served as medical missionaries,” recalls Prinsell. “The biggest influence in my life and work is the love and support of my family,” said Prinsell, who has been married to Kim for 31 years, and with whom he has two sons, Jeffrey and Eric. “Our loving family bonds continue to strengthen over time.”

Medicine is a multi-generational calling in the Prinsell family. His son, Jeffrey, is a physician. His father, Gustave ’48, is a physician, and his mother, Louise, a nurse. Now retired, his parents lead active lives in the Houghton community.

Despite many achievements and accolades throughout his career, Prinsell continues to focus on the lives his work impacts. “Years later, I’ll hear from patients who say ‘this saved my life,’” reflects Prinsell, who cites that relieving others from suffering is the most rewarding aspect of his career.
Wei Hu
Professor of Mathematics and Computer Science
Kristin Camenga

Treating breast cancer. Predicting flu virus mutations. Avoiding sexual predators on Twitter. These are just a few areas researched by Dr. Wei Hu, professor of mathematics and computer science.

Dr. Hu’s research relies upon data mining, which uses the speed of computers to sift through large amounts of unstructured data to discover patterns. This process was used to sort through data for thousands of breast cancer patients, trying to identify gene sequences that correlated with successful chemotherapy treatment. By directing medical professionals to a small number of key genetic factors, this information could be used to better diagnose the type of cancer and choose chemotherapy drugs most likely to be effective for a specific patient. Most recently, Dr. Hu and his students have used data mining to determine a Twitter user’s gender based on his or her 140 character tweets. Such information can be crucial in detecting sexual predators as in cases where middle-aged women have posed as teenage boys.

While the outcome of Dr. Hu’s research could have lasting effects in medicine or social media, the process itself has proven to be a transformational one for Houghton students. From reading papers to learning background information, to formulating the research question, to carrying out the research, and then writing a scientific article – students are involved in each step of the process. Since 2009, 12 of his 34 papers were written with students. Through class assignments, honors projects and the Summer Research Institute, Dr. Hu creates opportunities for students to engage in significant research.

“I’m very glad that my undergrad research was in an area where it could make a difference,” says Erin Bard ’11. “If it weren’t for Dr. Hu, I never would have considered doing my research in a non-technical area; and even though it was more difficult, I’m proud to have made the extra effort, and I have him to thank for that.”
Thomas Kettelkamp
Professor of Recreation and Physical Education
Cindy (Prentice ‘82) Austin

During his 38-year tenure at Houghton, Dr. Thomas Kettelkamp, “TK,” has made the most of every opportunity God has placed in his path. He has taught courses in recreation and wellness, coached baseball (and now golf), led 22 groups of students to Honduras for Mayterm, taken students to Munich, Germany, for Onkle Tom’s Baseballercamp, and taken at least one trip down a river for a college fundraiser.

TK has also served as a consultant for government-sponsored development programs in Costa Rica, Honduras, Bolivia and El Salvador. Last spring, TK and his wife, Margo, spent a sabbatical semester in Bolivia on a Fulbright Scholarship from the U.S. State Department. He taught several intensive courses and led workshops at the Universidad Evangelica Boliviana in Santa Cruz, an affiliate member of the Council for Christian Colleges and Universities.

TK was also the keynote speaker for an International Congress for South American health care professionals, sponsored by the Bolivian Ministry of Public Health. His topic was “The Connection between Poverty in Rural Bolivia and Obesity and Cardiovascular Disease.” Obesity and cardiovascular diseases are drastically increasing in Bolivia, particularly among indigenous populations such as the Incas. The recent availability of unhealthy (but cheaper) food is having a huge impact, and health professionals there are just beginning to understand the link between nutrition and health. TK and Margo plan to return to Bolivia in June 2013 to follow up with those who participated in last year’s workshops and to continue development of a master’s degree in community health.

From my first class with TK in 1980, to introducing him to baseball players in Germany, to working with him again back at Houghton, I have been amazed at his ability to network and to teach—all the while mixing in a healthy dose of crazy adventures. For this tall “Gringo” with his doctorate in leisure studies, life has been anything but leisurely!
Jillian Sokso
Associate Professor of Art
Abby Buckingham ’14

Professor Jillian Sokso is a dynamite printmaker and teacher. She has pushed my art in new directions and made me think about art in new, wonderful ways. Professor Sokso’s recent experience teaching papermaking in Africa has inspired me to think about my own artistic practice, challenging me to use my art to positively impact the world.

The journey to Sierra Leone began in Houghton last summer, when Professor Sokso and former student, Renee Roberts ’12, made paper from locally harvested plant fibers and cotton fibers from locally collected clothing.

This past February, the duo took their craft overseas to Makeni, Sierra Leone, in conjunction with Women of Hope International, where they taught papermaking to women with minor disabilities. Given the lack of technology and tools common in the college printmaking studio back in Houghton, they improvised and taught the women to beat the fibers by hand using giant mortar and pestles over an open fire. Crafts produced using the hand-made paper would be sold to help the women earn a living.

For Professor Sokso, this experience was a unique way to combine her art and Christian calling. “It’s such an authentic extension of my practice; it’s already what I do. I’m already a printmaker. And I’m already an artist. And I’m already a teacher.” The trip was so much more than simply making paper. “The goal was to alleviate poverty, in every sense of the word: spiritual poverty and people’s disconnection with their environment, with God, and with each other.”
Amanda (Young ’01) Cox

I met my friend David Davies on the first day of our freshman year in the depths of the basement of the library for Dr. King’s class, Music in Christian Perspective. As we began to think and talk about music and how it relates to our faith, we couldn’t have realized that 15 years later, we would be composing and performing music together as colleagues at Houghton College.

One of the challenges facing composers today is finding a way to make use of one’s gifts outside of academia’s aesthetic “ivory tower.” This is especially so for the young Christian composer seeking to function within the body of Christ and maintain a faithful Christian presence in the broader musical community. With this challenge in mind, Professor Davies established the New Song Composer Residency for Houghton College students.

The residency pairs a gifted Houghton College music composition major with two church congregations. The student composes two original works to be used in worship services and interacts with the music directors of the participating congregations. This provides an essential “real world” music-making experience. As the worship director at Houghton Wesleyan Church, I was excited to participate in the inaugural year of the residency with Houghton senior Anne Nickerson.

Professor Davies has provided an important opportunity for young composers to enter into the life of the church and discover how their gifts can be used to glorify God and lead His people in worship. It is a valuable step in the necessary, sometimes difficult, and ultimately rewarding process each composer must negotiate as he or she discovers how his or her voice can best serve the Lord and His people.
Ndunge Kiiti ’88
Associate Professor of Intercultural Studies
Jaime Colman ’13

Often the word “innovative” sparks images of new technology that develop new currents in culture. What if being innovative meant new ideas about old possessions — a new perspective about the material objects right before one’s eyes? For Dr. Ndunge Kiiti, the question of innovation is simply: what is in your hand? Kiiti is part of Vinya wa Aka (“The Strength of Women”), a woman’s group birthed in 2001 during Kenya’s economic crisis. Every month, the 15 members each give an agreed upon amount of money to another member to financially support a business or project that person is undertaking. Some of the women make jewelry, others make bags, and some have their own businesses. In a merry-go-round system, not only are goods shared, but a sense of connectedness is established as well.

The story of Florence provides insight to the empowerment such women’s groups foster. When first invited to become a member of Vinya wa Aka, she declined out of embarrassment of her financial state. The women decided, against Florence’s wishes, to give her their collected money for that month. With the funds, Florence started a small catering business, which now caters for one of the six largest companies in Nairobi.

An African proverb says, “A human becomes a human because of other humans.” Professor Kiiti’s innovative work has taught me the importance of combining research with faith to creatively work toward the common good of individuals and communities. She has an Amos-like fire for justice that motivates her to use whatever is in her hand to further the Kingdom that is already here, but is yet to come.
The Houghton College Class of 2013 celebrated Commencement in the midst of family, friends, faculty, staff, administrators, board of trustees, and members of the Class of 1963. On the morning of Saturday, May 11, 2013, 261 undergraduates and ten master’s students walked across the stage of the John and Charles Wesley Chapel to receive their diplomas and join a group of more than 20,000 individuals around the world who call themselves Houghton alumni.

The Commencement address was given by Dr. Nathan O. Hatch, president of Wake Forest University. Dr. Hatch began his comments by complimenting Houghton College’s rich history and promising future. “Focus on what is set before you,” challenged Dr. Hatch, “my advice is...it is better to master something than dabble in ten different things. When you have a challenge, learn to master it... no matter how difficult. True strength and character is forged by encountering and dealing with difficulty.”

The senior class gift, an interpretive nature trail on the Houghton greenway, was presented by Sydnie Cunningham ’13. “On behalf of the Houghton College community, I gratefully accept this gift,” said President Mullen. “The tradition of leaving a visible sign of one’s presence as a class on this campus goes back a very long way. This will ensure that we will not forget you.” In addition to the Commencement festivities, Houghton also welcomed members from the class of 1963 for a 50-year reunion. “It was a thrill to host 96 class members and guests for the 50th reunion for the class of 1963,” said Dan Noyes ’93, executive director of alumni relations. “It was an honor to hear their stories of God’s faithfulness, to witness their excitement at renewing relationships that began on the Houghton campus 50 years ago, and to see new connections being made between current students and Houghton alumni.”

In closing the ceremony, President Mullen said, “When you first wake up to the world as a college graduate, commit yourself in the face of any fears you might feel to the twin calls of patience and boldness as you find the next place of challenge and grace that God has prepared for you, knowing that He who brought you to this place has every intention of completing His work until the day of Jesus Christ.”

HOUGHTON WELCOMES NEW ADMINISTRATIVE STAFF

Continuing its commitment to seek accomplished and passionate Christian leaders, Houghton College proudly welcomes five new members to the community.

ROBERT POOL
Vice President for Student Life

Dr. Pool’s preparation extends through his service in student life at Hobart and William Smith Colleges, University of Evansville and Southeast Missouri State University. His ample knowledge, leadership skills and training make him an ideal vice president for student life, as he assesses Houghton’s programs and goals with a fresh perspective and a vision of enriching Houghton’s legacy.

Christ at the Center
“I love to help students creatively solve problems, overcome obstacles and discover the potential God created in them. At Houghton, Christ is at the center of all we do. Before meetings convene to address the problems of the day, we pray. When a student needs help, together we seek God’s direction. Houghton helps students grow in their faith – it is essential and core to our mission.”

ERIC CURRIE
Vice President for Enrollment Management

Eric Currie holds a decade of experience within the academic realm, after having served as director of enrollment and student services at Asbury Seminary’s Orlando campus. Houghton College’s reputation of high-quality academic work and thoroughly relational community impressed and attracted Currie, who wished to work in an environment committed to Christian scholarship and relationship.
Engaging the World
“T have already been able to live out my passion at Houghton because it is a place that connects Wesleyan theology, not only within the local area but also around the world. The ability to recruit students and to represent a school that passionately believes in engaging the world for the Kingdom of God places a fire inside me that burns deeply!”

DAVID SMITH
Vice President for Finance & Planning
David Smith ’73 accepted his role as vice president for finance and planning after having worked for the International Business Machines Corporation almost 39 years. His last 20 years at IBM were spent as an executive, where he managed finance, business operations, customer relations, information systems, product development, and sales.

Giving Back
“I reached a point in my career where I wanted to move from the business world into a place where I could give back – either in ministry or the church. It became clear that God’s next step for me was at Houghton. My Houghton experience as a student was wonderful, and my deep desire is to keep it a thriving place for my grandkids.”

MICHAEL JORDAN
Dean of the Chapel
According to Houghton President Shirley Mullen, Dr. Jordan encompasses the combination of academic and pastoral experience, interpersonal skills, and practical wisdom that makes him an excellent fit for Houghton’s next dean of the chapel. Dr. Jordan will partner with the academic and student life leadership to plan Houghton’s Christian educational curriculum and to provide leadership to the students’ spiritual development.

Worship in its Own Right
“My desire for Houghton is to see us understand worship as a spiritual practice in its own right. Too often we think of worship only as our grateful response to God, and not as a discipline He will use to change us as we encounter Him in worship. I try to reassure worshipers that it’s okay if they’re not “feeling it” on a given day, that God still honors our gift of time and can use the discipline of setting aside time to worship to do amazing work in our hearts.”

STEVE DUNMIRE
Director of Church Relations
Dr. Steve Dunmire is an ordained Wesleyan pastor who has served urban, suburban, and rural churches. For the last eight years he has served as senior pastor of North Collins Wesleyan Church, a community which has experienced eight consecutive years of growth. He and his wife, Tammy, are both 2001 graduates of Houghton College.

Called to Houghton
“I love the church, and have loved tackling the challenges of pastoral ministry, but I knew the Lord was calling me back to Houghton this year. I believe this new position allows me to directly connect two of my greatest loves: the church and Houghton College. It is an honor to be a catalyst for developing and nurturing a mutually beneficial relationship between Houghton and the global church in many new, creative, and meaningful ways.”

Christian Camping

Christian camping has been a lifelong adventure for Bob Sabean ‘58. Serving with Latin American Mission since 1965, Bob spent the first 15 years developing Costa Rica’s most well-known camp in Central America, Camp Roblealto. He went on to co-found Christian Camping International Latin America which provides resources, training and support for all the Spanish-speaking Christian camps of Latin America.

Today Sabean teaches and trains camping professionals all over the world. Over the years, he has been a professor of recreation at the National University of Costa Rica, as well as advisor to the government of Costa Rica in the development of the national policy on recreation. He co-founded the Institute for the Formation of Instructors, a 17-day-long intensive training institute through which C.C.I.L.A. forms its instructors, giving them official approval to teach the camp counselor and program director training courses in their respective countries.

At 76, Sabean is still on that Christian camping adventure. He is currently writing a book in collaboration with the University of Costa Rica titled El Juego: una Perspective Cristiana (Play: a Christian Perspective), due to be published early this fall. He hopes to teach the book in seminaries and Bible institutes around Latin America to the next generation of pastors and camping professionals.

Bob and his wife of 50+ years, Nancy, make their home in San Jose, Costa Rica.

Council, and Marilyn continues to minister through music, preaching and her unique and well-respected counseling ministry throughout the world. Together, they continue to lead annual pilgrimages to Israel, Greece, Turkey, Jordan and Egypt. Their retirement home is in Orlando, Florida, a perfect place for their two children and nine grandchildren to visit.

Jean (Hogan) McFate and her husband, Paul, spent 25 years working at Camp Pinnacle, a Christian camp in the Helderberg Mountains just outside of Albany, N.Y.; and 17 years serving as missionaries with IAM in east/central Africa doing discipleship ministry. Now in retirement, they continue to serve both ministries by volunteering once a week at the camp and once a week at the IAM headquarters.

Faye (Boorum) Zuidema retired in June 2012 after a career in secondary education that spanned 46 years. Dr. Zuidema spent her last 15 years in education as assistant principal for curriculum at Santa Fe High School in Alachua, Florida. She remains active in First Baptist Church of Alachua, Florida, and resides with husband, Jack ‘66, on their horse farm where they raise thoroughbreds.

Mark S. Caruana has served Tabernacle Baptist Church in Utica, N.Y., as pastor for the last 13 years. This year his congregation received a grant of $47,425 to enable him to participate in the 2012 Clergy Renewal Program funded by the Indianapolis-based Lilly Endowment Inc. This program allows pastors to step back from their busy lives and renew their spirits for the benefit of their ongoing ministries. During Dr. Caruana’s 13-year tenure, Tabernacle Baptist Church has welcomed hundreds of ethnic Karen refugees from Burma (Myanmar) into its congregation. He will be spending his sabbatical immersed in the history and culture of Burma, the experience of Baptist Christians in Burma, and the experience of other Baptist congregations in the U.S. that are welcoming refugees from Burma into their fellowships. His plans include an extended visit to Burma in late 2013.

Pocket Vinyl

When Eric Stevenson ’08 and Elizabeth Jancewicz ’09 of Pocket Vinyl play a show, they give the audience a heart-stopping artistic experience – complete with Stevenson pounding on the piano and singing while Jancewicz paints an original work of art live on stage. At the end of each show the painting is sold to the highest bidder. The husband and wife duo tour for a living and recently finished their “Little Dog Tour” after playing in 24 states over the last four months.

“Life on the road is fantastic!” says Stevenson. “The adventures and joy always outweigh the negative parts.” Although touring can be strenuous at times, Stevenson and Jancewicz are doing what they love. “We’re some of the only folks who sleep in their car sometimes,” adds Stevenson, “yet feel like they’re living the dream!”

Pocket Vinyl has released two full-length albums, “Protagonist” in 2010, and “Monsters Talking” in 2011. In 2013 they released a 7” called “MP1” which was the world’s first “MP” (Mini-Play). They are working on their third full-length album “Death Anxiety,” due to release in the fall of 2013. To learn more about Pocket Vinyl and to see some of Elizabeth’s paintings, visit their website www.pocketvinyl.com. When they are not on the road, Eric and Elizabeth make their home in New London, Conn.

George Beverly Shea

Grammy Award-winning singer, George Beverly Shea ’32, went to be with his Lord on April 16, 2013, in Asheville, N.C., after a brief illness. He was 104.

Born in Winchester, Ontario, in 1909, to evangelist Adam J. Shea and his wife Maude Whitney Shea, “Bev” (as he is known to friends and family) was eight years old when his family moved to Houghton, N.Y., in 1917. During his childhood years in Houghton, he lived next door to President James S. Luckey. Shea enrolled at Houghton College in the fall of 1928, and though he left for financial reasons in 1929, maintained a close tie to Houghton throughout his career with evangelist Billy Graham, routinely coming back to campus to visit family members still in the area. In 1956 he was awarded an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree; in ’73, he was named “Alumnus of the Year;” and during Houghton’s Centennial celebration in 1983, he was recognized as one of the “Houghton Hundred,” outstanding individuals of Houghton’s first century.

Shea is survived by his wife, Karlene; his son and daughter-in-law, Ronald and Kathy Shea; his daughter, Elaine Anderson; and his granddaughter, Tamara Anderson. In addition, he is survived by Karlene’s children and their spouses, Steve and Fran Aceto and Nanci and Jack Edwards; her grandchildren and their spouses, Ben and Tiffany Aceto; as well as their children, Kylie Aceto and Knox Hampton Aceto; Bill and Sallie Aceto; Matheson and Jeff White; and Ellis Edwards. He is also survived his brother, Alton J. Shea ’36; and sister, Ruth (Shea ’41) Willett; and many nieces and nephews who attended Houghton, including Sally (Shea ’66) Syme, David W. Robinson ’63, Eunice (Robinson ’66) Sitzer, A. Jonathan Shea ’63, Eila Shea ’66, Paul W. Shea ’69, Nancy (Wright ’70) Tucker, Thomas L. Willett ’68, Christine Ruth (Willett ’73) Greenwald, Brock W. Baker ’74, and Tod H. Baker ’82.

He was preceded in death by his first wife, Erma Shea; his parents, the Reverend A.J. Shea and Maude Whitney Shea; and siblings, Pauline Lusk, J. Whitney Shea ’33, Mary (Shea ’23) Robinson, Lois (Shea ’38) Wright and Grace Baker.

Ken Nielsen
Soft spoken and wise; welcoming, generous and kind; loving husband, faithful steward, and friend; famous maker of pancakes and connoisseur of Perry’s Ice Cream. Ken Nielsen, former vice president for finance, died on January, 21 2013. He was 81 years old.

For 36 years, Ken Nielsen worked largely out of view of the students managing the business of Houghton College, but his impact and influence can be seen everywhere on campus.

If you ever …
…ate a meal family-style in the basement dining facilities of East Hall;
…braved the “Pamper Pole” or the other high elements on the ropes course;
…cheered for the Highlanders at a home basketball game in the gym;
…hung out at Big Al’s over milkshakes and chicken wings;
…lived in Rothenbuhler (South Hall), Lambein (Brookside) or the Townhouses;
…took a ski lesson on Houghton’s ski slope;
…walked from the campus center to get to a class;
…visited the President’s home on Centerville Road;
…spent time in West Seneca at the Lambein Learning Center;
…took a horsemanship class at the College Farm;
…had your own space to work in Stevens Art Studios;
…went on the Highlander Adventure;

If you remember the day they moved Fancher;

Then you have experienced the legacy of Ken Nielsen.

Long-time close friend and colleague, Dr. Dan Chamberlain, gave Ken’s eulogy: “He was a totally remarkable man, and one that we miss terribly,” said the former Houghton College president. “The world is a better, brighter place because he walked this way.”

Ken is survived by his wife of over 57 years, Doris “Mabel” (Garrett ’71) Nielsen, children, Marla (Nielsen ’83) and Dr. Daniel Omdal ’84; Dorislee (Nielsen ’86) and Maher Dandan; Timothy Nielsen ’90 and Adina Nielsen; and grandchildren, including current students Carly Omdal ’16 and Jens Omdal ’16. Silas R. Molyneaux

Col. Silas R. Molyneaux ’36, U.S.A.F. Ret., passed away on Saturday, October 27 2012, in Eastern Niagara Hospital, Lockport, N.Y.

Col. Molyneaux was born in Houghton, N.Y., in 1916, just south of the village on a road named for his family. He graduated from Houghton Seminary in 1932. After college he received his M.A. from Columbia University and taught in area high schools before joining the U.S. Air Force. His military career led to the rank of colonel and included faculty service at West Point and the Air Force Academy.

In 1960 he was assigned to the Pentagon as chief, research and analysis division, in the office of the Secretary of the Air Force, where he wrote the preamble to the Air Force’s plan for putting a man on the moon. He spent four years there in long-range planning and received the Legion of Merit Award from President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964.

Col. Molyneaux gave the convocation address and received an honorary doctorate at Founders’ Day in 1984. Molyneaux always appreciated his Houghton education, citing in the address that his experience in the original college choir under director Wilfred Bain prepared him for the discipline of the military. He was the Alumni Board president from 1972 through 1983.

Molyneaux is survived by his wife, Marilyn Brauer Molyneaux; son, Joel Molyneaux; daughter, Leslie Fruzak; four grandchildren; and several nieces and nephews. He was predeceased by brothers Glenn, Max, Evan ’29 and Charles Molyneaux ’36; sister, Roberta (Molyneaux ’36) Grange; and his first wife, Eleanor Kaltenborn Molyneaux.
