Dear Friends,

Serving the Commonwealth of Kentucky as Commissioner of Education was one of the most rewarding experiences of my career. Much of my team’s work during that period centered on transforming the high school experience. Data and conversations with students and families made it clear that high school was not meaningfully preparing many of our students for success in college or the workforce, and that, in many cases, the core requirements for the high school diploma took much less than the prescribed four years to complete.

With that understanding, we expanded access to high quality postsecondary experiences for high school students, including industry recognized certificates, apprenticeships, Advanced Placement and International Baccalaureate coursework, and of course, college coursework. Expanding access to college courses positively impacted the high school experiences of thousands of students, and in alignment with the findings of educational research, increased the likelihood of students’ matriculation to college after graduation. Further, I saw first-hand the power allowing well-prepared high school students to access college coursework.

When I arrived at Houghton in 2021, there were very few things I insisted should be part of the institution’s path forward. One of those areas was expanding high school students’ access to high quality Christian coursework through Houghton University. Serving high school students was not new for Houghton, but beginning in 2021, we worked to expand their access through the establishment of Houghton’s Early College, the expansion of courses available to high schoolers, and the establishment of Houghton’s Partner Schools program. Today, with nearly 50 partner schools, domestic and international, Houghton serves more high school students through dual enrollment and Early College coursework than ever before, with growing numbers of those students matriculating to Houghton following high school graduation.

With the continued expansion of postsecondary coursework available to high school students across the U.S., it has become common for first-year students to begin their college careers with accumulated college credit. The only question for Houghton was whether we intended to be one of the postsecondary options high schools and students choose from as an early college partner. As you will read in this issue of Houghton Magazine, our response has been an unequivocal yes.

Yours in Christ’s Service,

Wayne D. Lewis, Jr.

The Role of Early College

Tammy (Joubert '01) Dunmire

High school students now, more than ever before, have many educational options and opportunities. The three most common options for high school students to get ahead in their collegiate academic journey are through Dual Enrollment courses, AP (Advanced Placement) Courses, and Early College Courses. Each of these three options offer different benefits to students. Dual Enrollment courses are taught through a local high school by high school teachers, but credit is given through a partner college or university that has approved the teacher and syllabus. AP courses are also taught by a high school teacher, designed to be taught at a college-level, concluding with an exam that can potentially earn the student credit, based on their score in the course. Early College courses are taught by a college or university professor at the college level and transferrable credit is earned. All three options complete both high school requirements and college requirements (potentially) simultaneously.

Since its beginning, Houghton University has been a place to find a rigorous Christ-centered education. Houghton has remained faithful to this mission over the years, and continues to do so as we have grown our Early College program. We continue to provide an economically affordable option that is comparable in price to a local community college, but with the academically challenging environment we have always been known for. Our courses provide an opportunity for students to be stretched both academically and spiritually as they are taught by professors who not only are experts in their fields, but also tie in their strong personal faith.

As the Director of Houghton Online, I have been excited to see Houghton grow into this expanding space so that everyone has the opportunity to sample our courses and see what kind of an academic experience they can have through Houghton.

Three of my own four children are current Houghton students. My children took AP courses, Dual Enrollment courses and Early College courses. The Early College experience best prepared them for starting as a matriculated student at Houghton. Taking courses taught by Houghton faculty who pushed them to learn how to study challenged them beyond what they were receiving from their high school teachers. They were able to realize that they could integrate their own faith into their learning experience. This was life-transforming for them, and helped them begin to see the world in a way that integrated their faith in all they rather than compromise their faith as something separate. I felt this experience best prepared them to enter college, and also increased their options—to graduate early, add a second major, or complete distinct minors—allowing them to customize their Houghton experience to better prepare themselves not only for graduate school, but also for their careers as scholar-servants in a changing world.

Tammy (Joubert '01) Dunmire serves as Houghton University's Director of Houghton Online. She lives in Painted Post, New York, with her husband Steve Dunmire '01 and children Hannah '26, Jonathan '28, Matthew '28 and Joshua.

Online to On Campus: A Place of Welcome

Amanda (Shine '05) Zambrano

Ryan Kullander '27 began his Houghton journey as a high school student when he enrolled in online Early College courses. A homeschool student from Anchorage, Alaska, Ryan and his family searched for college credits that would count toward completion of his high school diploma and help him get ahead in college. While Ryan had taken college classes through similar programs, when he and his family found Houghton University's Early College program, it struck a chord.

Ryan has always had an interest in Christian education, which attracted him to Houghton's offerings. The tangible benefits of Early College, however, were the affordability of the classes and their asynchronous format that allowed him to participate in spite of time zone differences and his other responsibilities.

"Online can feel a little distant at times," remarked Ryan, who has experience with online classes from other institutions. "But I felt the distance between me and my professors less because of the way they recorded their lectures or wrote in emails or discussion forums. I felt very welcomed. I felt my professors really cared."

Ryan, an elementary education major with a focus in humanities and a minor in Bible, began his Houghton Early College experience with introductory-level classes, Biblical Literature with Rev. Dr. Ron Duttweiler '85 and Intro to Sociology with Professor Suzanne (Brenneman '94) Beardsley. He went on to complete at least two more higher-level online courses, including Board Game Science with biology professor Dr. Ransom Poythress and Developmental Psychology with Dr. Hannah Kim.

Being able to take college classes in high school allowed me to realize that college really was the right fit for me and to decide if math was a major I wanted to pursue. It also allowed me to find out what level I needed to work at in a college setting, instead of just being told what college was like. I was able to interact with professors who treated me like the rest of the class and expected me to work to the same level as any other student.

Taking early college courses reduced my credit load, allowing me to get some basic general education requirements out of the way and go straight into classes that I wanted to pursue in advanced mathematics. I also had less fear trying classes that sounded interesting, because I had a solid base of required classes built. I had time to do things like German I, German II, and Hebrew, and have enjoyed adding Lyric Theatre to my college experience. I think the best benefit I had was an early introduction to a college setting and college-level work without any buffer or speculation about what college was really like.

Warren Torraca '26

As a homeschool student, independent course load management wasn't entirely unfamiliar to Ryan. His time with Early College, however, pushed him to hone practical skills in time management. Board Game Science, a summer course, provided Ryan the opportunity to learn to balance his summer job with his studies, not dissimilar to the way he juggles a busy schedule on campus now.

"I think those Early College classes cultivated my abilities so that I could then confidently take on five classes at once and then the London Honors program the next semester," noted Ryan.

The Early College courses set a high standard within the context of a welcoming and Christ-centered community. Both Developmental Psychology and Board Game Science had a mix of college students and high school students. "It was real work," said Ryan, as he compared his Early College courses with his undergraduate work on campus. "with a real final project. The classes felt like a pretty real workload in a real class."

Ryan enjoyed his time in Early College, but wasn't convinced about coming to campus for his undergraduate degree. His youth pastor, Houghton alumnus Ross Atherton '21, encouraged Ryan to submit an application to Houghton University anyway. It was Ross's description of Houghton's welcoming community and opportunities for spiritual growth that inspired Ryan to apply.

Over the past two years, I have taken eight college classes, including Humanities 101, Foundations of Digital Communication, Introduction to Psychology, and Biblical Literature. I've benefited from getting to know some of my future professors and classmates while discovering my interests and deciding on a major. I've finished many of my general education requirements and completed enough courses that I may be able to graduate early.

Member of the Incoming
Class of 2029

When Ryan was accepted to Houghton, he was invited to apply to the first-year London Honors program and offered a travel voucher that enabled him to interview on campus during an Honors Interview Weekend. The beauty of the campus and the welcoming atmosphere of his interview weekend, including a one-on-one interview with Dr. Susan Bruxvoort-Lipscomb, solidified Ryan's decision.

Ryan is profoundly grateful for his time with Dr. Benjamin Lipscomb, Dr. Bruxvoort-Lipscomb and Dr. Christian Esh '98 during his semester in London. "All three of them were so in tune to me and to my academics both. Frequently, they would see me reading and check on how I was doing, not so much how the reading was going, but rather asking about me, my spiritual life, about moments of fun I'd had."

Ryan stepped on Houghton's campus with a desire to engage with community and an enthusiasm for a wide array of activities. His first collegiate Houghton experience was with the Highlander Wilderness Adventure program prior to the start of his first semester. He joined the Roaring Sheep Ultimate Frisbee Club, where he crossed paths with Dr. Poythress for the first time in person. Ryan joined a Bible study, hosted by Matthew Foster '25, whom he had first met through Board Game Science's online discussion forums. Ryan auditioned as a guitarist for Sunday night's Koinonia services, and has enjoyed the connectedness and corporate worship as a member of a Koinonia team. Ryan also stepped into a leadership role on campus as a resident assistant (RA) in Rothenbuhler Hall, where he welcomes young men into Houghton's community the way he was welcomed.

Ryan shared that his experiences on campus at Houghton live up to everything he imagined and more. Thanks to completing his introductory Bible classes as a high schooler, in his first semester on campus, Ryan enrolled in an upper-level Bible course studying the Pentateuch with Dr. Andrew Walton '06. He was the only first-year student in his class. That class presented an opportunity to build a relationship with Dr. Walton, and Ryan has taken a class with him every semester since.

Ryan isn't the only member of his family to benefit from Houghton's Early College courses. His younger brother, Caeden, has also taken Biblical Literature online, as well as Dr. Peter Meilaender's course on C.S. Lewis. Caeden loved the class and shared with Ryan how eye-opening and challenging it was. Caeden will be joining the ranks of Highlanders on campus in the Fall of 2025 and, like his brother, will spend Spring 2026 in London with the London Honors program.

"Houghton sets high standards from the moment you hear about it," said Ryan. "The things that are always talked about are Houghton's really strong and welcoming community and its Christ-centeredness. Those are high bars to live up to, and when I got here, I found Houghton really does go above and beyond what I anticipated. Every week, I find myself really appreciative and amazed."

Amanda (Shine '05) Zambrano serves as the Director of Advancement Communication and Editor of Houghton Magazine.

In their words:

Early College courses not only give students a head start on college credits but also help acclimatize students to the style, format, rigor and personal touch of Houghton. Sometimes, first year students struggle to adjust to a Fall semester so full of new things. Early College classes can help ease students in a bit. Plus, they get to see some of what makes a Houghton education so special: the fully-orbed, Christ-centered approach to academics and the friendly, caring personal touches the professors add to their courses.

Ransom Poythress
Associate Professor of Biology

Early College at Houghton University offers motivated high school students a meaningful head start on their academic journey. I've seen firsthand how it opens doors, not just to college credit, but to academic growth and opportunity. One student I worked closely with, Ryan Kullander, was able to take upper-level courses as a freshman at least in part because of the foundation built through the program. Further, the program made it far easier for him to add a Bible minor to his chosen course of study. I believe that Early College has the potential to cultivate both confidence and college readiness for those students who take advantage of it.

Early College Impact

Carolyn Powers is a homeschooled high school senior from Warwick, New York. She enjoys ballet, goat farming, crochet and spending time with children. Carolyn will enroll in Houghton University in Fall 2025 and is considering a dual major in Music Education and Inclusive Childhood Education.

Houghton University's Early College program has been life-changing for me. This program allowed me to earn over 30 college credits while still in high school, meeting all my general education requirements for my undergraduate degree. Because of this amazing head start, I plan to have a dual major or graduate a year early. Participating in these courses gave me an opportunity to develop the academic and time management skills I needed to adjust to the rigorous requirements of college-level work. My confidence grew as I went along and experienced success, easing my fear of attending college full time next year.

Not only has this program made an impact on my academics, but it has been an extremely rewarding experience for me. The relationships I have made while completing my courses have been invaluable. Multiple professors faithfully took time to connect with me during personal meetings. They were genuinely interested in getting to know me and always made sure I had the support I needed for their courses. They learned personal things about me and would remember to ask for updates. For example, I have a small goat farm, and one of my professors frequently asked me how my goats were doing. Another professor knew that I had a big ballet performance coming up, prayed for me, and asked me how it went the following week. My professors also greatly encouraged me in my faith when I shared personal struggles with them, and they reminded me to continue trusting in the provision of God. These personal relationships that I formed with my professors made me feel valued as a student, person, and Christian.

The forums and discussions throughout my Early College courses had a major impact on my biblical perspective as I processed the material we covered. We were encouraged to share our views and discuss each topic at a deeper level. This helped me refine my view on sensitive topics and explore things from various points of view. I'm thankful for the format of Houghton's classes because it requires a higher level of thinking and analysis, rather than rote memorization of meaningless facts.

I am extremely excited to attend Houghton University next fall. After experiencing firsthand the individualized, personal attention that students receive at Houghton, I know I will feel at home. I am confident I will receive the same support and encouragement that I did during the Early College program, so I am no longer nervous about the workload for my freshman year. I am also looking forward to meeting some of the friends I've made during my classes. Houghton's Early College program has significantly impacted my life, as it has allowed me to make an extremely smooth transition from high school to college while deepening my relationship with God and connections with Christians at the same time.

College Credits Through Dual Enrollment

One of the ways Houghton provides access to Early College courses is through dual enrollment arrangements with our partner schools. Houghton's partner school network comprises more than 40 private Christian schools, some as close as Houghton Academy, or Northstar Christian Academy (Rochester, NY), and some as far as Rift Academy (Kijabe, Kenya) and Alliance Academy International (Quito, Ecuador). One of the many benefits Houghton provides to our partner school is the opportunity to offer dual enrollment courses to their high school students. Dual enrollment courses, unlike online early college courses, are taught by approved high school teachers in a traditional classroom setting. The instructors and their syllabi are reviewed and approved by Houghton's academic department to ensure appropriate academic content and rigor, and students who complete their classes earn college credits for those classes.

Alumna Lori Miranda '02 is the English department chair, director of curriculum and instruction, and English teacher for grades 10, 11 and 12 at Northstar Christian Academy in Rochester, New York. Lori is one of Houghton's approved dual enrollment instructors, who teaches College Literary Studies for seniors at Northstar Academy. Lori holds a BA in Writing from Houghton University and an MA in Missions and Intercultural Studies from Wheaton College Graduate School. She's been a teacher at Northstar Academy since 2016. Prior to her work at Northstar, Lori taught high school English at Webster Christian School.

Lori shares the following about her early college dual enrollment course:

My Houghton Early College class, College Literary Studies, appeals to students who want to continue challenging themselves in their last year of high school. I rarely have students who plan to study literature in college, so my students are selecting this class very intentionally for its academic rigor and impact. That is quite a contrast to many other seniors who seek to make their academic load as light as possible. My students don't want a simple, passive final year of high school studies. Instead, they want to continue growing in their academic skills and understanding. By partnering with Houghton, I am able to reward those students' diligence. Additionally, beyond the academic benefits of the class, my students gain the immediate, concrete benefit of earning college credit, which they can apply wherever they study. The significantly discounted tuition for the course is greatly appreciated by my students, many of whom are preparing to take significant financial responsibility for their lives for the first time in the near future.

Lori asked her students for anonymous feedback on the impact of the class and was happy to share some of their insights.

"This class has benefited me in many ways. Firstly, it has made college more affordable, as the classes are cheaper to take here at NCA rather than at any college, and I found this class worthwhile. I enjoy coming into class every day to learn about the author's true intentions of what we have read. Some of the works we have covered this year have impacted the way I think and look at the world in a positive sense."

"...[T]his class has challenged me much more than the typical English class, which I greatly appreciate. I just feel like this class makes literature and grammar much more interesting and displays it as something worth learning more than just another subject we have to learn. I love the curriculum because everything we do has a purpose. ...This class has been beneficial for not only my academics but my overall high school experience."

"This College Literary Studies class has been of benefit to my outlook on things, and how I think about things. This class has helped me improve articulated thinking, and has helped me to retain information better... This class is both entertaining and educational...and I now see myself implementing and paying attention to the techniques we've learned in class when I'm reading on my own time."

Intention & Integrity

Amanda (Shine '05) Zambrano

Ask anyone who has taken courses on campus at Houghton University: a hallmark of the Houghton experience is the faculty who embody academic excellence with intentionally integrated faith, and who pair that excellence with a deep care and concern for the individual student. It might be challenging to imagine this distinctive Houghton feature applying to students who aren't on campus. Faculty members at Houghton, however, approach online education—including Early College courses—with the same intentionality and academic integrity they bring to their physical classrooms.

The theme of intentionality rings throughout Houghton's faculty as they discuss their approaches to Early College coursework. Dr. David Clem '05 MM'07, Dean of the Greatbatch

School of Music, said, "We [the faculty] are dedicated to a Christian worldview that permeates our syllabi. We take the same approach to Early College education and expectations—with a bit of extra patience and grace—as we do the courses we teach on campus. The faculty all feel strongly about maintaining the integrity of a Houghton education."

One of the ways Houghton maintains this academic integrity is by offering Early College coursework taught by full-time professors, a distinctive from many other institutions that rely on part-time or adjunct instructors. For some Early College courses, high school students have the opportunity to interact with college students, discussing ideas and working off the same course expectations. There is no "free pass" for Early College students.

Professor of English, Dr. Jonathan Gates '85, echoes Dr. Clem's sentiments. "For many Early College students, this is their first college experience and an introduction to Houghton. I have the same teaching philosophy for my high school students as I do for my college students, although I approach my high school students with the understanding that they have a little less life experience. I want them to have a good experience with Houghton courses, but I also want them to have a true experience."

Whether Dr. Clem is teaching Intro to Film Music or Dr. Gates is teaching Writing in the Liberal Arts, they both prioritize integrating a Christian worldview into their course content. This isn't simply tacking on a devotional or prayer, or exclusively exploring Christian works—this integration of faith and learning helps students develop a Christ-centered framework for how they think about a topic and how they apply their learning. "We want to help students develop critical thinking skills on complex issues within the guides of a Christian worldview," remarked Dr. Clem. "Early exposure to these concepts will help students in the future, whether insuring they're prepared to attend Houghton or supporting their personal development if their educational futures take them elsewhere."

Dr. Gates designs Writing in the Liberal Arts with intentional time for students to reflect on the interrelationship between "the character of The Word, words, and our own words," then helps students to understand the direct relation of their reflections to their studies. "Students long to know writing matters to who they are and who they're becoming," said Dr. Gates. "This class is an opportunity to explore that."

Dr. Gates dedicates hours to interacting with his Early College students through Zoom meetings, email and online chat-style platforms for course dialog. In these contexts, he writes to them extensively, modeling the types of thoughtful, well-constructed written responses he expects of his students. "I want students to grow in love and enjoyment of writing, while recognizing it is a difficult task."

When Houghton's distinctive qualities rely on personal relationships, it can be challenging to understand how online Early College classes can provide a

"real" Houghton experience. "The delivery is different," observed Dr. Clem, "but it is there."

"This is a college course," Dr. Gates

The care with which we structure our courses strives to maintain the relational academically challenging, Christ-centered education for which Houghton is known.

stated quite plainly. "It's the real deal. Some Early College students struggle because they're not ready for college coursework, and we build in off-ramps for those students who are in over their heads. But when my students begin to view themselves as writers—that is, someone who writes regularly and well—it is truly rewarding. Seeing even my youngest students increase in confidence and competence, I know that their needs are being met."

"Online coursework, including Early College coursework, exists and it isn't going away," remarked Dr. Clem. "If high school students don't get Early College coursework from Houghton, they'll get it somewhere else. Houghton has the opportunity to speak into the online educational arena with the same distinctives that it speaks into in-person education. A Houghton education is what it is for reasons that go back to our founding; those reasons are applicable in the online space and we have the ability to bring Houghton experiences to students who might otherwise not have that opportunity."

Excerpts from And You Shall Remember: A Pictorial History of Houghton College, written and edited by Frieda A. Gillette and Katherine W. Lindley

The Houghton University we know and love is a four-year, residential liberal arts college offering undergraduate and graduate degrees. The idea of a high school student taking Houghton courses might be a foreign one to some of us. At Houghton's founding, however, in 1883, there were no collegiate courses at all. Houghton Seminary's purpose was not college degrees, but rather accessible, affordable, Christ-centered education. Students as young as 11 enrolled at Houghton, and the first accredited college diplomas weren't awarded until 1925. The high school division remained, however, and eventually became Houghton Academy.

When [Old Sem] was dedicated in August 1884, no one knew how many students would enroll in September, who would teach them, or how much of the building would be completed. Although the building was only partially finished on September 15, 1884, school opened with "70-80 scholars" under Principal-Preacher William Henry Kennedy and his assistant, Luther Grange. Miss Alice Boardman taught the high school courses and Miss Eva Davis taught the English Course for students not prepared for high school. "Sister Mary DePew to take oversight of the lady students and to give them weekly lectures," wrote Willard Houghton in his ledger. James S. Luckey, who enrolled in the second of the three terms of that first year, later wrote, "Equipment, to say the least, was scarce. I think one globe was to be found and perhaps one or two maps, but nothing else in the line of apparatus. I was told there were no blackboards, but they had come at the beginning of the second term" (The Houghton Star, April 1911).

Although the curriculum included only the upper elementary grades and the first year of secondary school in that first year, one year of high school was added annually until a four-year diploma was issued. Melvin E. Warburton received the first diploma in 1887 and James S. Luckey the second in 1889.

As faculty became available, new programs could be added. When Gussie C. Dodd, an accomplished artist and wife of the new principal, A.R. Dodd, moved to Houghton, the Seminary added "a complete course in drawing, crayoning and oil painting." Luther Grange started a commercial and business course in 1885 for "young men and ladies too, if they desire;" in 1890 Miss Effie Crow initiated a music department; in 1893 a two-year elementary teacher course was introduced. In 1895 the church approved an Advanced Department, i.e. "college equivalent work," and in 1901 John Willett of Levant, New York, completed that course, the first graduate of the Advanced Department.

From the ALUMNI BOARD

Hey, Highlander family,

Kaylee here — a proud graduate of Houghton's Class of 2019 and a member of the Alumni Board.

UPDATES FROM THE ALUMNI BOARD

At our Alumni Board meeting this past spring, we reviewed the results of the alumni engagement survey, which focused on Homecoming and Family Weekend and other key ways for alumni to stay engaged with the University.

On behalf of everyone on the board, I want to give a big thank-you to all of the alumni who participated. To everyone who completed the survey — and now everyone reading this magazine — I want you to know that, regardless of your current level of connectedness with Houghton, your personal convictions or how long it's been since you've returned to campus, you are a welcome member of the Houghton family, and we are grateful to hear your perspective.

GET INVOLVED AND STAY CONNECTED

I encourage you to come back for Homecoming and Family Weekend 2025 (Oct. 3-5). You can expect a wonderful time of fellowship, with some updates to the festivities made in direct response to your survey feedback. I hope to see you there.

I also recognize that some of you may not be able to come back to campus this fall. Whether the reason is distance, a busy or challenging season of life, or something else, I'd like to offer encouragement by letting you know that there are other great ways to stay connected with Houghton. Here are two ways I want to share:

- » Pray — There are many great ways to cover Houghton, and the people who make it such a special place, through prayer. To name a few, you can pray for the university's administration, faculty and staff, current students, future students, and recent graduates who are beginning their vocations.
- » Alumni Ambassador Program — Another way to get right into the action is to join the Alumni Ambassador Program. Alumni Ambassadors are authorized to offer $2,000 scholarships to prospective students who have yet to apply to Houghton. This is an incredible way to share what Houghton offers and help the next generation of servant leaders on their educational journey.

However you choose to stay connected, know that your impact matters and continues to be part of Houghton's story.

In His service,
Kaylee (Jentsch '19) Brady

The Willard J. In January, Houghton University announced a $3M gift to create an endowed chair that will be known as the Ellen F. Donley Dean of Education and Behavioral Science. The anonymous gift created an endowed fund to provide vital resources in perpetuity to support this faculty position.

The deanship honors the life and legacy of Ellen F. Donley, a Houghton alumna from the Class of 1938. Miss Donley (1917-1964) was one of four sisters whose parents had an unusual interest in providing their daughters opportunities for spiritual and educational growth. They gave their children persistent guidance and sacrificial support so that each daughter could attend and graduate from Houghton College (now University).

In May, Dr. Michele V. Vanasse was appointed the inaugural Ellen F. Donley Dean of Education and Behavior Science. She holds a PhD from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst with a concentration in Teacher Education and School Improvement alongside an MEd from Montana State University-Northern and a BA in Elementary Education and Biblical Studies from Trinity Bible College. HIGHLANDER ATHLETICS NEWS

Athletics Holds Induction for 2025 Hall of Honor Class

Ken German '61 and the 1998 Field Hockey Team are the latest inductees into the Houghton Athletics Hall of Honor after a luncheon ceremony among friends, family, and Houghton staff on May third.

The honorees of this induction class join a Hall roster that now totals 71 alumni, coaches, teams, and contributors.

Ken German, Class of 1961

Described by his friend and classmate, Paul Mills, as "...the epitome of a scholar-athlete", Ken German excelled in four sports during his years at Houghton College, while studying pre-med and zoology. In athletics, German was best known for his accolades on the baseball field and the basketball court, but he also participated in football and track & field. A native of nearby, Cuba, New York, German studied pre-medicine under Dr. George Moreland. While with the Highlanders, he would also serve as Vice-President of the Pre-Med Club, Business Manager of the Lanthorn, and as a member of his class cabinet and student senate. German would eventually graduate with honors in the spring of 1961. Following graduation, German earned his medical degree from Temple University and practiced orthopedic surgery in Las Vegas, Nevada. He and his wife Elaine eventually moved to LaGrande, Oregon, where he retired from a private medical practice in 1997. They had three children: Brian, Laura, and Robert.

1998 Field Hockey Team

The 1997 team, which produced an upset win over Bloomsburg University, set the stage for the successes of the 1998 team. Heading into the 1998 campaign, Head Coach Donna Hornibrook labeled her young squad as talented, fast, and well-balanced, but she was anticipating a rebuilding year. The team opened with a 4-1 preseason win over defending DIII champion William Smith, and knocked off Ithaca and Juniata to open the regular season. The third game of the year brought in DII Lock Haven, a team that had won three national championships over the previous six seasons and would go on to finish as national runners-up in 1998. The Highlanders got the 4-2 upset win with Judy Johnson tallying three goals. Houghton would win nine-straight games to open the season before losing to eventual DII national champion Bloomsburg, then closed the year with six more wins to finish with a 15-1 overall record.
